The starting point for this project is to remove the dams on the Lower Snake River. With the dams removed, the goals for "Reading Between the Lines" are to resuscitate the farming towns of Almota and Penawawa, and to reestablish the railroad as a viable transportation option for farmers’ products, and for people. With a free-flowing river, thriving agricultural communities, and active rail lines from Penawawa to Lewiston there will be ample tourist and recreational opportunities. An additional goal of "Reading Between the Lines" is to create the infrastructure to support these opportunities. This is done by creating train stations in Lewiston, Almota, and Penawawa, along with new parks and growers’ markets in these locales.
